What you should know about COVID-19 and CYBERBULLYING

Parents

REMEMBER: CONVERSATIONS WITH YOUTH ARE IMPORTANT

• Start talking about online behavior as soon as they start using technology and return to the conversation as their technology use evolves
• Your child may not recognize that hurtful online behavior can be cyberbullying, especially in new settings like virtual classrooms
• Discuss what cyberbullying is and steps to take if they experience or witness it

CYBERBULLYING & COVID-19

• Youth are spending more time online for school, connecting with peers, and socially interacting with friends
• Kids are still adjusting to learning and interacting with their peers virtually
• Many young people may be feeling new and uncertain emotions due to the pandemic, such as anxiety, anger, fear, isolation, or stress
• This unprecedented period, as well as more time spent online, have the potential to cause an increase in cyberbullying behavior

IF YOUR CHILD IS BULLIED ONLINE, WHAT SHOULD YOU DO?

• Be supportive of your child; you might be the first person they've told
• Let them know you are there to help
• Document the situation and keep a detailed record with screenshots and saved texts
• If the cyberbullying is happening:
  - In your child's distance learning classroom or with peers: Inform your child's school. Most schools include cyberbullying in their bullying prevention policy.
  - On a social networking site: Check the safety page for ways to report and block
• The most important message to give your child is that they aren't alone and that, together, you can find a solution

Cyberbullying is using a form of technology—such as the internet, cell phones, or virtual classrooms—to intentionally hurt or harm someone else.

PACER's National Bullying Prevention Center. Create a World Without Bullying | PACER.org/bullying.